As we say so long to summer and settle back into our routines, it’s a good time to plan our futures. Though many of us want to guide our lives as we age and control our futures as much as possible, too many of us do not share our wishes with others.

Speaking with your loved ones about your wishes takes some thought and consideration. From their perspective it will be about losing you, about recognizing that one day you will no longer be with them.

But, realize that by having this discussion you are doing what’s best for you and your loved ones. You are not only ensuring your wishes will be carried out but you are removing future burden from them. You will be giving them peace of mind by allowing them to take comfort in knowing they fulfilled your wishes.

Often having a successful discussion about the end of life comes from the “why” behind your wishes. This type of understanding can only come from open and honest conversation.

Here’s a few tips to help make the end of life conversation a bit easier:

- Think about what you want. Begin by really thinking about what you want. It may help to consider your values, beliefs and views about what matters in life. This will help you offer specifics to your loved one and be able to answer their questions and concerns.

- Choose the right moment. Pick a time when your loved one has time to talk, not when they are running late for work, getting the kids ready for school or burdened with a task. Often daily activities can provide a good opening to end of life conversations.

- Give them a reason. It may help them understand by telling them why you have decided to talk about this now.

- Share your values. Your loved ones will have an easier time understanding your choices if you begin by sharing your personal thoughts, values and concerns.

- It can be more than one conversation. Some family members may be very open to talking about your wishes and in fact even be waiting for you to initiate the conversation. Others may be more reluctant and less at ease talking to you about end of life care.
Meet Lee Sims – Board Member since 1996

For sixteen years you have been an active Board Member and promoter of Hospice of Montgomery’s (HOM’s) cause. What brought about such passion and commitment to Hospice of Montgomery?

When I joined the Board of Directors, I immediately saw the dedication and good work that this organization does. Not long after, I attended the first Long Range Planning workshop, the focus of which was to develop a strategic plan. That two day exercise made me aware of the wonderful mission of HOM and its benefit to this community. It caused me to become involved in HOM as a board member and to become a stakeholder.

What is the most enjoyable part of serving on the Board?

Working with people who are dedicated to HOM and give freely of their time and resources.

Are there any particular struggles that HOM faces as a small, non-profit hospice? How have you dealt with them as a Board Member?

There is competition from over a dozen for-profit hospices that make survival difficult for a local, community based HOM. Continuing to support HOM by serving on the board and sharing its mission and values with the community is one of the best ways to help HOM overcome such an obstacle.

While there may be some hurdles for HOM, there are also certain aspects that make us unique in the River Region. What are they to you?

HOM is, in my estimation, unique in the River Region, because this community needs quality hospice care for the long term. This can be achieved through the partnership of support that we enjoy with the community, when other hospices will no longer find it profitable to stay. I have always believed that HOM belongs to this community in a way that other, for-profit hospices do not.

Our ability to serve the community when other hospices will not find it feasible to do so is, in large part, due to the financial and volunteer support that our community provides HOM in return for the unsurpassed care that HOM gives.” - Lee Sims  Barganier Davis Sims Architects Associated

Our New Look

Have you noticed that something looks a little different about our logo lately? Well your eyes aren’t playing tricks on you. We have recently revamped our logo and new marketing materials designed by Anoroc Agency.
An enthusiastic contingency of dedicated volunteers led the way as Hospice of Montgomery’s 19th annual fundraiser, Monte Carlo 2013, turned out another stellar performance in raising needed financial support for services dedicated to patients with life-limiting illnesses and their families throughout the River Region.

The always anticipated event, which was held April 18 at Wynlakes Golf and Country Club, featured an impressive Silent Auction that included original artwork by local artists, garden and landscape décor, elegant home furnishings and antiques, exquisite jewelry, handmade clothes and accessories, sports memorabilia, vacation excursions, a collection of fine wines and more.

Dedicated Hospice of Montgomery volunteers collected the auction items from generous area merchants and other HOM supporters who contributed valuable items that Monte Carlo patrons couldn’t resist. This year, the combined efforts of Monte Carlo volunteers and auction item donors generated the highest number of items available for purchase in the history of the event.

Monte Carlo 2013 Event Chair Jane Barganier praised the hardworking volunteers who coordinated the successful event and emphasized the importance of their efforts. “Hospice of Montgomery is a non-profit organization that provides an invaluable service in Montgomery and in nine other counties across the River Region, Barganier said. “Because of the great efforts of our committee members and the kind generosity of our auction donors, Hospice of Montgomery is able to provide expert health care, comfort and compassion to seriously ill patients and their families in our community. I am incredibly grateful for their support.”

Other volunteer leaders who helped make the event successful included Tracy Horne, event co-chair, Ann Winborne, silent auction chair; Ann Collister, silent auction co-chair, Susan Harris, sponsorship chair, Roxanne Holland, sponsorship co-chair, and Jennifer McConnell, publicity chair.
